The International Studies Major is an interdisciplinary program with areas of specialization in Global Security, Politics and Policy in the Global Economy, and Culture in an Age of Globalization. Students select one of these three tracks for specialization.

Each track allows students to become familiar with contemporary academic debates on global issues and to begin to engage in those debates. Globalization has never been more central to the human condition. National security, national and global economies, human rights, natural resources, sustainability, and the global flows of technology and imagery are all part of International Studies curriculum.

Global Security:
Causes and solutions to political crises, violent conflicts, and human rights challenges in interstate, transnational, and domestic settings.

Politics and Policy in the Global Economy:
Policy issues pertaining to international commerce and trade, aid and development, and related environmental and natural resource problems.

Culture in the Age of Globalization:
Cross-cultural interactions at different levels: local, national, and transnational, and the impact of globalization on cultures.

ADVISING
Schedule an appointment in Starfish with Molly Donnellan or Csanád Siklós

INTERNATIONAL STUDIES MAJOR
301 Ingraham Hall
ismadvisor@wisc.edu
(608) 262-8431